The Great Fire: The Burning of St. Patrick's Church, 1935

by J. Michael Finn

Shortly after 4:00 PM on Tuesday, May 28, 1935, Roland Noe and another worker were working on the roof of St. Patrick's Church in Columbus. Noe was a tinner who worked for John J. Shilling. Noe said, "I was working on the southeast corner of the roof, putting copper tubing in the rain trough. A spark blew from the charcoal pot I was using and caught the building on fire." It is believed that the spark set fire to a bird's nest. "When I saw the fire, I called down to the boss (John J. Shilling) and he turned in the alarm," said Noe.

That small spark resulted in one of the most disastrous and serious church fires in the history of the Diocese of Columbus. Fortunately, no lives were lost. The first alarm was tuned in at 4:26 p.m., followed by two other alarms at 4:29 and 4:33, and followed by a call for additional equipment at 4:45.

The acting pastor of St. Patrick's was Father Aloysius Alfred Sibila, O.P. He was upstairs in the parish house at the time of the fire with Father Richard Raymond King, O.P. Father Sibila spotted the smoke seeping through a corner of the roof. He and Father King went immediately into the church and removed the Blessed Sacrament which they devoutly but quickly carried to the priests' residence.

The two priests then heroically returned to the church where they were able to save the sacred vessels and vestments as the fire spread along the ceiling of the church. Assisted in this effort by volunteers, the two priests succeeded in carrying out nearly everything movable before the flames prevented them from reentering the church. "A good many people helped us," said Father Sibila, "Their help enabled us to save almost all the altar objects and I want to thank them." Many persons who assisted were students from nearby Aquinas High School.

From small beginnings the blaze quickly became an inferno. Fanned by a very strong west wind, the flames spread rapidly through the top rafters of the church. Firefighters struggled for over two hours to both extinguish the fire and protect the nearby rectory and school building.

Seventeen pieces of fire-fighting apparatus and over 120 firefighters were soon assembled around the church. Columbus Fire Chief Edward P. Welch was in charge of the scene. The firefighters poured heavy streams of water on the roof from 13 hoses in order to check the progress of the flames. In less than 15 minutes sections of the roof caved in sending burning timbers into the church below.

About the time of the roof collapse, the cross on the front gable of the church crashed to the ground. Spectators reported seeing the eerie sight of a rainbow halo caused by the sun on the streams of water when the heavy cross hit the pavement in front of the burning church.

About an hour after the fire began, a group of firefighters were moving an aerial ladder in front of the church when it hit and short-circuited two high tension electric lines. The two 6900-volt lines burned in two and fell to the ground. The wires electrified water gushing from the front steps of the church. Chief Welch was just coming out of the church and he stepped into the high voltage water and was knocked unconscious.

Firefighters rushed to his aid along with the Chief's two young sons, Robert and Charles who had been watching the fire (Robert was a student at Aquinas High School). Chief Welch was not badly injured, but was transported to Grant Hospital where he was kept overnight before being released. Captain Virgil O'Rourke and five other firefighters were also injured in the blaze, mostly due to smoke inhalation. Due to the absence of Chief Welch, Assistant Fire Chief Clarence Ogborn assumed charge of the fire.

Six of the large stained glass windows, scarred or cracked by the heat and virtually ruined, were said to have been valued at $600 apiece. The organ in the church was also destroyed. It had been purchased second-hand and installed in 1895. The exterior walls of the church and many of the stained glass windows were preserved. The statues of Mary and Joseph on the side altars were also unscathed by the fire.

The pastor of St. Patrick's, Father Hyacinth Lawrence Martin, O.P., was in Mt. Carmel Hospital at the time of the fire recovering from eye surgery. Attempts were made to keep the news of the disaster from him; however, he heard the news broadcast on the radio in his hospital room. "He wanted to leave the hospital and help us," reported Father Sibila, "Hospital attendants had to restrain him, because of his illness."

An unofficial estimate of loss on the building, made by E. J. McNulty, the agent who wrote the insurance policy on the church, was $115,000. McNulty reported that the church was insured by a blanket policy for $164,000. In 2012 dollars the damage would amount to approximately $1.9 Million.

A rebuilding fund was immediately begun. Columbus Mayor Henry W. Worley contributed the first $100 toward the fund. The announcement of the mayor's donation was made by John M. Casserly, Deputy Service Director for the city. Mr. Casserly was named chairman of the rebuilding fund.

Bishop James Hartley announced that Mass would be held the following Thursday, the Feast of the Ascension, and on Sunday and weekdays at their usual hours, in the parish school next to the church. Masses continued to be held in the school until the church was repaired.

The day after the fire, Father Sibila commended the work of Chief Welch and the Columbus firefighters for the manner in which they fought the fire. He particularly noted their work for succeeding

by Reverend Lawrence J. O'Connor
Chaplain, Division of Fire, Columbus, Ohio
(Imprimatur: Most Rev. Clarence G. Isseemann, Bishop of Columbus)

St. Florian, Heaven's patron of firemen, who once was dedicated to the service of your firemen as an official in the Army of Rome, look with kindly and professional eye upon your earthly force, desirous of preserving our fellowmen from dangers to life and property.

Give us cool heads, stout hearts, strong muscles, an instinct for prudent investigation and wise judgment.

Make us the terror of arsonists, the friends of children and law-abiding citizens, kind to the frightened, polite to bores, strict with law breakers, and obstinate to temptations.

In troubles give us strength to be efficient; in times of danger, give us the ability to be calm and enable us to impart assurance to those who verge on panic.

You know, beloved St. Florian, from the sacrifice of your own life for the sake of your Faith, that the fireman's lot on earth is not always a pleasant one; but your sense of duty that so pleased God, your courageous strength that so overwhelmed the devil, and your saintly self-control, give us inspiration.

Make us as fearless in practicing the laws of God as we are brave in protecting the lives and property of our fellowmen.

And when we answer the final alarm, enroll us in your heavenly force, where we will be as proud to protect the throne of God as we have been to protect the city of man.

AMEN.

in checking the spread of the fire to the adjoining parish school and rectory, despite the fact that the firefighters' efforts were handicapped by a high wind.

The rebuilding fund grew and construction on the church began almost immediately after the fire. The church was completely rebuilt and redecorated in less than a year. The successful effort was credited to the "boundless energy" of the pastor, Father Martin.

On February 16, 1936 the parishioners of St. Patrick's returned to their rebuilt church. A new organ was added to the church, along with Stations of the Cross, a ceiling mural of the Coronation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and new pew heads bearing a shamrock. Also added to the church was a new Shrine of Blessed Margaret of Costello, O.P. that was constructed in the vestibule.

The "Miracle" of the Windows

Several years ago the author of this article was working with Columbus Battalion Chief Sean Moore on a project to recognize the work of Irish firefighters in Columbus. One of the fires featured on the display was the 1935 St. Patrick's Fire. I noted that the St. Patrick's Parish history stated that the church windows "miraculously came through unharmed" in the fire. Battalion Chief Moore laughed when he heard that statement. It seems when he was taking his fire training, a retired Columbus firefighter was instructing the new recruits on the particular dangers of church fires. Battalion Chief Moore recalled that the trainer told them, "Remember not to break any of the stained glass windows—they cost a lot of money and the church members get real angry when they are broken." So whether the windows that survived the Great Fire were spared by a miracle or by the efforts of Columbus firefighters remains a mystery.

Columbus Fire Chief Edward P. Welch

by J. Michael Finn

Fire Chief Edward P. Welch, who was injured in the St. Patrick's Fire, had a long record of service to the City of Columbus. A devout Catholic and eventual veteran of two wars, Chief Welch joined the Columbus Fire Department in 1913. He was chief of the department when he died in 1947.

Edward Welch was born in December 26, 1891 in Columbus. Contrary to tradition, he did not want to be a firefighter as a boy. He did "hang around" fire engine houses. Following on his father's occupation, as a young man he was employed by the Hocking Valley Railroad. By 1913 had worked his way up to the position of machinist. It was in 1913 he heard the Columbus Fire Department was hiring and he signed on as a substitute firefighter, a position that was made permanent in 1917.

At that time only four of the city's sixteen fire companies had motorized equipment. The other companies were horse-drawn. Welch would always say that he loved horses. At his first fire on Hamlet Street, four horses died. It is speculated that this may have accounted for the continuous battle Chief Welch fought to end fire hazards in Columbus.

From 1914 to 1923 Welch assisted the Fire Department in its mechanization efforts. His machinist's training helped him advance in the department. Gradually, the horse-drawn fire units were retired and replaced by motorized units.

Welch was promoted to lieutenant in 1923 and became a captain in 1926. He was appointed chief of the department on June 22, 1933 by Mayor Henry Worley, becoming the only firefighter to be promoted from captain directly to chief.

Welch entered the army in 1917, taking a leave of absence from the department to join the 324th Field Artillery. During his service he rose to the rank of lieutenant. He was commanding officer of the fire department at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. At the war's end he returned to the department and served continuously until 1942 when he again took a leave of absence to enter the armed forces. He was in charge of fire prevention activities for the Army's Fifth Service Command until 1944. He was discharged with the rank captain.

For Welch, being the fire chief was a 24-hour a day job. He always attended the 11:00 a.m. daily Mass at St. Joseph's Cathedral, where it was said he prayed for the safety of his men. While traveling to and from the office a two-way radio kept him in constant contact. At his home, a direct telephone line connected his room with fire headquarters. If a second alarm was sounded, regardless of the time of day or night, he was called. The ringing phone sent Welch on his way to the fire. He was known as a "fireman's chief" generally to be found in the thickest part of the toughest blaze. He was on the scene in February, 1936, when a collapsing wall killed five Columbus firefighters at the burning Odd Fellows Temple.

Under the leadership of Chief Welch the Columbus Fire Department entered the modern age, utilizing more modern equipment and taking advantage of technological advances in communications to assist the firefighters in their assigned duties. He was a constant advocate for fire safety and improved fire safety laws and building codes.

On February 27, 1947, at the age of 55, Chief Welch was taken to Mt. Carmel Hospital due to a heart ailment. He died shortly after arriving. He was given the last rites of the Church by Mt. Carmel chaplain Fr. Edmond C. McEniry, O.P.

He was survived by his wife, Helen (Cody) Welch; two sons, Charles and Robert; three daughters, Kathleen and Mary and Sister Mary Veronica, O.P.; two sisters, Mrs. Mary Stowell and Miss Nelle Welch, both of Columbus; and two grandchildren.

Active in both church and civic affairs, Chief Welch was a member the Knights of Columbus, the Holy Name Society, the Eagles, the Elks, the American Legion, and Charity Newsies. He was a member of Immaculate Conception Parish in Clintonville.

His funeral services were held on March 1, 1947 at Immaculate Conception. The funeral service was crowded with prominent city leaders, state officials, and firefighters. In addition, there were delegations of firefighters from cities throughout Ohio. Assisting the Rt. Rev. John J. Fagan, pastor, at the Solemn Requiem Mass was the Rev. John Donahie of Holy Name Church as deacon and the Rev. M. G. Metzger of Holy Rosary Church as subdeacon.

Monsignor Fagan extolled the virtues of the dead fire chief. "He realized that man does not live by bread alone," Monsignor Fagan said. "The chief adopted the role of helping others in their daily lives." Chief Welch was buried in St. Joseph's Cemetery.

The Columbus Dispatch said in an editorial regarding Chief Welch, "Fire Chief Welch was not only a highly respected public official. He was a solid citizen, devoted to his family and the church, who stood forthright in support of the common virtues. His way was neither devious nor mysterious, but open and simple as befits a man who believes that life is an obligation as well as a privilege. His death removes a familiar and trusted figure from the city's official family."
